THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL POINTS

TO THE BIG RAILROAD MERGER OF VAN SWEARINGEN BROTHERS

The Combination of the Chesapeake & Ohio, Nickle Plate, Hocking Valley, Erie and Pere Marquette Railroads, Which Have a Total of 10,000 Miles With An Investment of Approximately One Billion Dollars Is Bound to Get the Approval of the Inter-State Commerce Commission This Week.

Henry W. Anderson of Richmond, Virginia, and Thomas R. Gay of the same city who represent a small group of dissenting stockholders of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

The closing argument will mark the end of one of the most famous hearings ever held before the interstate commerce commission. The hearing on the Van Swearingen application began last April and has been continuing with the exception of a few recesses totaling only a few weeks, thruout the summer and fall.

The testimony mounted up to approximately 2,000,000 words and about 400 exhibits were introduced.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

On the eve of the final chapter of the greatest railroad unification in recent years word comes from Washington that the interstate commerce commission will approve the plans of O. P. and M. J. Van Swearingen of Cleveland, to unify five great transportation systems of the country into a single system, known as the Nickle Plate road.

This concluding chapter will be written before the interstate commerce commission during the next four days, starting Monday morning, when the commission will hear the final arguments for and against the proposal of the Cleveland brothers.

A favorable decision may be expected before spring, and possibly within a month or so, according to dispatches from the Capital city.

The Coolidge administration is definitely committed to the proposal of unification of railroads of the country into a limited number of systems.

While the Van Swearingen plan differs slightly from the commerce commission to unify the railroads into 19 major groups, it fits President Coolidge's views.

Despite opposition of a small group of stockholders of the Chesapeake & Ohio and Hocking Valley railroads, a majority of the commission has reached the conclusion that the Van Swearingen unification is in the public interest, the dispatches say.

The roads to be unified with the Nickle Plate are the Chesapeake & Ohio, Hocking Valley, Erie and Pere Marquette.

The five great transportation systems have a mileage of approximately 10,000 miles, with investment in road and equipment of over $1,000,000,000.

The Van Swearingens will be represented before the interstate commerce commission in the final arguments by Colonel William A. Colston and Newton D. Baker of Cleveland.

Opposing them will be Colonel

Girls Who Wear Them are Flirting With Undertaker Says Dr. C. P. Robbins.

Columbus, O., Dec. 28, (UP)—If Dr. C. P. Robbins, of the state division of communicable diseases, had his way chiffon hose, satin slippers and other prerequisites of the feminine wardrobe, would be thrown into the discard when the brisk breeze of winter begin to blow.

"The girls who wear those things these cold days, are flirting with the undertaker," Dr. Robbins told the United Press. "If these foolish girls do not come down with hard colds, they are running the risk of catching pneumonia or chronic catarrh."

Dr. Robbins holds that one of the fundamentals of good health is to keep the feet and ankles warm. "That can't be done with transparent hose and cloth shoes," he declared.

Japanese women will be allowed to practice law in the courts of the empire if a measure advocated by the woman suffrage party receives the approval of the next diet session. Discussing the proposed bill, which would put women barristers on the same plane as the male members of the bar, one of the leaders of the woman suffrage party said: "Women have proved to be good doctors and they are certainly better fitted to deal with crimes and home problems than men because they understand them better. The argument that women are too sentimental is ridiculous."

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY OF PRESIDENT

Woodrow Wilson Fittingly Observed in Five Hundred Cities of Country.

Washington, Dec. 28, (UP)—Five years ago today the United States was locked in bitter debate over the proposal made by President Woodrow Wilson for American participation in the League of Nations.

Today, upon the 69th anniversary of his birth, while thousands thruout the nation are performing services in his honor, the senate—with many of the old characters of that league conflict still on the stage, is approaching some steps in international relations to which he first pointed the way.

Simple functions of commemoration are being performed by organizations of his surviving followers; a Wilson postage stamp was placed on sale and scores visited his tomb in the cathedral atop Mount St. Albans, overlooking the White House where he lived eight years and the capital where he fought so desperately for a new experiment in international affairs.

Now, somewhat the same struggle, involving the same plot, is being enacted in the senate. There his chief supporters, Senators Swanson, Virginia, Democrat, and Walsh, Montana, Democrat, are leading a fight for American participation in the World Court. The leading opponents are: Senator Borah, Idaho, Republican; Hiram Johnson, California, Republican, and Jim Reed, Missouri, Democrat, fighting the court in the belief that it is an organ of the league.

There will be little public ceremony in honor of Wilson.

In memory of the late president, the government issued a seventeen cent stamp, engraved in banknote black with his portrait. The new stamp was placed on sale today at four postoffices. The first stamp was sold at Staunton, Virginia, the birthplace of Wilson, the second at Princeton, New Jersey, where he lived when elected president, the third at Washington where he was inaugurated and the fourth at New York, home city of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

Woodrow Wilson stamps will be placed on sale in every postoffice, as soon as supplies can be sent from the bureau of engraving at Washington.

A public dinner will be held in the city of Washington tonight, and Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in the Wilson cabinet, will be the principal speaker.

Adherents of the late Woodrow Wilson and his policies gathered in various sections of Ohio Monday night and paid tribute to the late president on his birthday anniversary. In five hundred cities Wilson admirers, both Democrats and Republicans, took part in the service.

Aged Woman Says Girls Swimming Is Age Wonder

Boston.—That girls actually go swimming at Nantasket and other public beaches is the greatest change in manners that Mrs. Ezra Brown, one of Cohasset's oldest residents, has noticed in her long life.

The dearly loved elderly lady whose house is a favorite visiting place of the young and old people in the town, declared on the eve of her ninety-second birthday that she doesn't begin to be as much impressed with the radio, automobiles, telephones and other signs of progress that have cropped up during her lifetime as she is with the way young girls have changed their manners.

She only wishes her mother could see the girls of today thinking nothing of disporting themselves on the beach and in the water. The Nantasket of her girlhood was visited only by men bathers, and the girls of her day would rather have died than taken a swim with people present.

MOUND REVEALS PERIOD OF PEACE

Explorers Make Important Discoveries Regarding Ancient Race.

Chillicothe, Ohio.—The autumn season with its uncertain weather conditions called a halt to the excavations in the Siep mound near Bainbridge just as archeologists announced they had made one of the greatest finds in the history of their explorations into the works of the American mound builders.

Until next spring the three-fourths of the mound which has not yet been opened will retain the secret it has held for centuries. During the winter the curators of the Ohio archeological and historical society, Columbus, will study their findings in the burial place of the "Princess of the Pearls."

Bodies to Be Arranged as Found.
The skeletons of the four supposed princes were removed from the platform on which they have long rested, preparatory to their transfer to the society's museum in Columbus. At the museum the bodies will be arranged as they were found a few days ago by H. C. Shetrone, archeological curator.

An ornament which is thought to be an instrument similar to the "pipes of pan" will be studied. If the ornament turns out to be an instrument, it will be the first time any record of the mound builders' musical inclinations has been found.

The discovery of a piece of colored cloth in the mausoleum of the four supposed princes wrote a new chapter in the endeavors of archeologists, for cloth has never before been found in the mounds. Besides the finding of the cloth, imprints of a canopy of fabric were found on the ceiling of the tomb. The intact piece of fabric was found under a copper plate beneath the skull of one of the skeletons. It bore circular designs done in colors of tan, green, black and white, it appeared. When exposed to the warm air, the fabric began to crumble, but not before artists had sketched the design and it had been photographed.

Quarts of Pearls About Bodies.
The early contention of the explorers that the four bodies had been shrouded in a fabric of pearls of varying sizes was borne out by later explorations. When the skeletons were lifted from their resting places, it was found that they had lain on a layer of small pearls, all pierced as if they had been strung or woven together. Several quarts of pearls were swept up and stored away for transportation to the museum.

Scores of fragments of tortoise shells, etched with figures of birds and highly burnished, were uncovered with the bodies. The figure of a swan cut from tortoise shell was found. A necklace of tusks, some of which are the largest ever found in Ohio, was unearthed. There were no weapons found buried with the dead. Curator Shetrone said the absence of weapons in the tomb is another evidence that the mound builders were a peaceable people more devoted to art than other ancient races.

"Big Game" Increasing in the United States

The rangers in the forest service took a census last year of the big game in the federal forests, and the recently published report allays the fear that such game is succumbing to the onslaughts of sportsmen.

"Big game," as technically used, includes antelope, bear, buffalo, elk, moose, mountain goat and mountain sheep. The census covers 159 forests, and for the first time enumerates the bear as big game.

The buffalo, as Americans miscall the bison, was for the first time dropped from the census, as bison in the United States no longer are "game," being in guarded herds. Nor did the rangers reckon game outside of parks and forests, though such animals are numerous.

There are about 5,000 antelope, or prong-horns, chiefly in Arizona and Idaho, though Nevada and Oregon jointly have a great herd not in a federal forest. The bears comprise 5,000 grizzlies, virtually all in Alaska, though Montana has a few, and 38,700 black or brown. Deer number 550,500, increasing by nearly 40,000 in the year. Every forest boasts an increase of elk, the number being 52,600. Moose, however, numbered only 5,100 in 1924, whereas in 1923 there were 8,000. Wild goats and wild sheep numbered, respectively, 17,200 and 12,400, each increasing slightly. The total of big game was 687,000 animals under protection by the national government.

Wild animals left to themselves in protected reserves steadily multiply. The bear is a costly nuisance to farmers and stockmen, but all other big game is harmless and an ornament. It should be given every protection.

Advancement in Tibet

The butter-burning lamps of Lhasa, forbidden city of Tibet, soon will be no more. Their place will be taken, even in the most sacred shrines, by electric lamps, and electricity to light these lamps will be generated by a hydro-electric plant that is now making its way on the backs of pack mules along trails reaching from the Indian border.

BORAH

Voices Protest Against Stifling Free Speech of Americans.

The constant effort to control by law the opinions of the American people and to take away from them their right to assemble peaceably to discuss the affairs of the nation is assailed by Senator William E. Borah of Idaho in an article in Liberty.

"Our institutions must and, in my opinion, can stand the test of experience; they must and, in my opinion, can undergo without impairment the scrutiny, even the scourge, of every delusion, or mad scheme, which the restless and discontented may advance," says Senator Borah. "But they cannot survive the denial of free speech, the destruction of a free press, or the refusal to permit the people to assemble and present their views or grievances."

"These principles, with the other guaranties of the Constitution, are indispensable to the maintenance of our government. We cannot expect in these times of ceaseless inquiry and intellectual turmoil, when the very foundations of human belief are assailed, that our form of government, our political creed, will escape inquiry as to their worth and their efficiency."

"I do not myself believe it necessary in defending American institutions and American principles to adopt the instruments of warfare of either the fascists or the communists."

"I would many times rather meet those who openly challenge our institutions and offer some other plan in lieu of ours than to have engrafted on our system a practice which is at war with every principle upon which our government rests. It seems to me to betray a lack of faith in the worth of the principles which we profess, and in the intelligence and character of the people who must sustain those principles."

Cross-Word Puzzles Boon to Golf Widow

It already has been suggested that cross-word puzzles are the almost providential and overdue instruments of vengeance ready to the hands of wives who have long suffered from golfing husbands. The fact that a wife is daily getting bogey for the solution of puzzles in the newspaper points the moral further. The golf widow can now be tied with the cross-word puzzle widower.

Evening conversations in the home should begin to have two sides and should run somewhat as follows:

"Sorry to be late for dinner, dear. Had to get in 18 holes."

"You're not late. Dinner's not ready yet. Had to fill in the last 18 squares in my puzzle."

"Well, that's all right. I had a great game. Made bogey on two holes. Say, do you realize what bogey is on the fourth?"

"Eleven, isn't it?"

"What! Eleven strokes?"

"No, silly. Eleven minutes for the fourth puzzle."

"I'm talking about golf."

"But let me tell you about the third puzzle I worked on today. It has the sweetest interlock!"

"Shush! On the fourteenth I had Jeff one down and—"

"Two across. Now it's time you're listening to me after all these years of golf monologue. Lend an ear. On the sixteenth square across I was, as you might say, in a trap to think of a word of five letters meaning a Tyrolean outcry. What do you know? It was 'yodel.' After that I fooled a personal pronoun and got lost in the rough of the lower left-hand corner. Well, I got out of trouble, but it cost me three minutes."

"What a lot of drive! You ought to have seen me today after I'd sliced—"

"—sharpened it and addressed the—"

"—with the deuce of a pretty niblick I—"

"—guessed the word was 'orthogonal'—"

"—after which I sunk a long—"

"—key word. One minute to play!"

"Blah!"

"Blah yourself!"

(A tribute of half an hour's silence.)

"Well, my dear, what's the latest dirt on the neighbors?"

"It's quite interesting, dear. I'll be glad to tell you. But first tell me what the boss said down at the office today."—Fairfax Downey, in New York Herald-Tribune.

Vienna Exports Coins

The output of the Vienna mint in 1924 was the greatest since its foundation, according to a report of the budget committee of the national assembly. Only a comparatively few of the coins struck, however, were for Austrian account, the bulk going to Poland, Bulgaria, North and East Africa and even Afghanistan, in the shape of the old Maria Theresa dollar. Altogether, the Vienna mint turned out 341,000,000 coins, calling for 7,000 pounds of silver every day of the year.

GOLDEN RULE AND WORLD PEACE

By DR. S. PARKES CADMAN

President of the Federal Council of Churches

In this powerful appeal for the adoption of the Golden Rule as a guiding principle in international relations, the great radio preacher holds up as an example in constructive international charity the work of the Near East Relief, which makes its annual appeal for the support of the American people on Golden Rule Sunday, observed annually in December.

NOTHING in the history of the American people of recent years so becomes them as their attitude towards the unhappy and persecuted people who have been the beneficiaries of the great work of the Near East Relief. At this season when the annual appeal for the support of this work is made, through the observance of Golden Rule Sunday, it is an overwhelmingly gratifying thing to hear the reports of the triumphs and successes of this philanthropy.

I have been hearing of the horrors of the Near East from the days of my cal promises have not always been realized, at any rate we have tried to retain the credit of our people by contributing generously to this work, which we must continue to sustain.

As a churchman, I may be permitted to point out that the Near East Relief has contributed enormously to the cause of church unity. At Stockholm a few weeks ago I had the privilege of conferring with all the patriarchs and metropolitans and archbishops of the Greek church. They assured me that they have been drawn toward the West not by the common early youth, when Mr. Gladstone conducted his memorable campaign in which he denounced the Turk and urged that the Turks should be thrust bag and baggage out of their country. The horrors have continued ever since, but our country has been an instrument in alleviating them by contributions out of its abundance to the crucial need of the distressed orphans and what few unhappy relatives they have left to them.

We can do no better thing than to give for those who are in need, and thus make such merchandise out of our material welfare as to have credentials for the life which is to come. I do not take the attitude that there is anything much to praise about the American people in this matter, though I am proud of them, as we all are. It would have been a strange thing if we had not done as we have done.

When you think of the millions which are squandered in this country upon feminine devices for beautifying—which do not always succeed in realizing their object—when you think of the vast cost of trying to make mutton look like lamb, when you think of the multitude of surplus things with which we surround ourselves in daily life, and then see this work for far-off children, I think you will agree with me that even though our political consent of intellectual minds nor by the doctors of the church, but rather through the work of Near East Relief. That work has won the hearts of great bishops as well as refugees and politicians. Truly we have seen the truth of the saying that a little child shall lead them. The little Armenian orphan, Zadi, whom thousands have heard sing and talk at the preliminary Golden Rule dinners in a hundred cities of this country, is a five-year-old representation of thousands of these Eastern peoples, whom we have approached not with theology or dogma but with those deeds of mercy which are the very essence of true religion.

There is a lesson of world peace in this philanthropic approach to the hearts of men. We must follow it up, with this decision—that we will not allow the state in the future to dictate to the church or to any body of men as to what shall be their attitude toward peace and war. We must take our patriotism from the preaching of the prophets. Unless we want a future like this every fifty years to repair the recurrent waves of slaughter and devastation, we must cling to the spirit of the Golden Rule. The quality of mercy is not strained. It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven. I beseech him that gives and him that takes. It becomes the throned monarch better than his crown.

The GOLDEN RULE in PRACTICE

A series of articles by prominent leaders on the Golden Rule as a guide in International Relations.

PLAIN LIVING AND HIGH THINKING

By CHARLES V. VICKREY

General Secretary of the Near East Relief

THE GOLDEN RULE is a universal creed. Everybody accepts it. Most people try to practice it.

Golden Rule Sunday is examination day—a day of plain living and high thinking; of self-measurement by the Golden Rule to see how big we really are.

Golden Rule Sunday comes midway between the feasts of Thanksgiving and Christmas.

On Thanksgiving Day we satisfy ourselves with good things. We survey our broad acres, bulging granaries, and busy factories. We reappraise our unprecedented and soaring wealth of more than three hundred billion dollars, far transcending anything previously or elsewhere known in all the world. Not least are we thankful for government under which life and property are safe. Truly no people ever had as great reason for gratitude as have we in America on Thanksgiving Day, 1925.

At Christmas we again indulge in feasting and mirth, and share some of our luxuries with relatives and friends, some of whom are sore perplexed to know where to store the gifts that we pour into their well-provided homes.

But on Golden Rule Sunday we express our gratitude and practice "pure religion undefiled before God" in a more vital way by considering the fatherless and widows in their affliction who, as worthy as we, by the vicissitudes of war, are bereft of everything. They have no lands, no granaries, no bank accounts, no savings, no employment, no homes, no food, except as the Golden Rule proves a vital reality in their lives. It is proposed that on Golden Rule

Sunday, all persons who are disposed to make a practical application of the Golden Rule, provide for their Sunday dinner approximately the same menu that is provided, when funds permit, by Near East Relief for the tens of thousands of orphaned children in its care, most of whom are under twelve years of age.

Having partaken of the orphanage meal and entered into fellowship with the children overseas, we are asked to make such provision for them for the 365 days of the year as we should like to have made for ourselves, or for our children, if conditions were reversed.

Golden Rule Sunday will be observed throughout the United States in December, on behalf of the Near East Relief. This series of articles, by prominent public men who are supporters and spokesmen for this great philanthropy, is designed to call public attention to the background and purpose of the work, and its need for general support.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Two Essentials
of Sweet Clover*For Soil-Building Purposes
It Supplies Organic Matter and Nitrogen.

When sweet clover is grown solely for soil-building purposes the question often arises as to when one should plow it under. As a fertilizer, sweet clover furnishes two essentials of a good soil—organic matter and nitrogen. The maximum amount of organic matter is undoubtedly obtained from sweet clover the second year when it comes into bloom. Prof. C. J. Willard of the Ohio experiment station, however, says that the maximum amount of nitrogen is obtained about May 1, the second year after seeding. Between that date and the full-bloom stage much of the nitrogen in the roots is transferred to the tops without increasing the total amount in the crop.

Tests for Nitrogen.

"In one experiment," says Professor Willard, "we sowed the clover with the oats on April 6, 1922. The same fall after the oats were harvested we began analyzing the plants—roots and stems—for nitrogen. These tests were repeated throughout the following spring and summer. A study of the resulting figures shows that during the period of greatest top growth there is a rapid transfer of the nitrogen from the roots to the tops. The roots, therefore, serve as a storehouse for the nitrogen during the winter, emptying the nitrogen into the green tops in the early spring. By the first of May there is practically as much nitrogen in the plant as at any time during the second year's growth. To grow 100 bushels of corn requires about 150 pounds of nitrogen for grain and stover. Turning under a good stand of sweet clover during the month of April will add something like 175 pounds of nitrogen, or more than enough to supply this large corn yield."

Tests Worth Remembering.

The above statements, based as they are upon carefully conducted tests, are worth remembering. It is not always convenient to postpone plowing under sweet clover till the spring, but it should be done wherever possible, first, because, as the above shows, one gets about all the nitrogen possible at that time, and second, also because one gets about all the organic matter that can be plowed under to advantage and be of use to the corn crop that same year. Third, when biennial sweet clover is plowed under after it has started to grow the second spring it will not bother as a weed. If plowed under in the fall after seeding in the spring it will come up as a weed the following spring.

Harvesting and Storing
Navy Beans for Winter

Navy beans should be harvested and threshed as soon as ready and if infested with bugs they may be treated by one of several methods. Fumigation with carbon bisulphide, using the chemical at the rate of about one ounce to the bushel, is very satisfactory. This should be done in a tight container when the temperature is 75 degrees or above. The chemical is inflammable and fires of all kind should be kept away. Heating for an hour in an oven with the temperature from 125 to 130 degrees will also kill the insects. Seed can be safely stored by sifting one part of air-slaked lime with twice the quantity of seed.

Birds Control Insects
in Garden and Orchard

Set the birds up to housekeeping and they will work for you—that, in brief is the idea conveyed in a news letter from the United States Department of Agriculture. The letter cites the example of 2,000 nests supplied for birds on the Baron von Berlepsch estate in Germany and the escape of this estate from the leaf-roller when trees on other estates were defoliated. Evidently the birds kept the insects under control. Says the letter of the United States Department of Agriculture: "Experience has shown that those who have increased the number of birds on their property have had cause for satisfaction rather than regret."

Alfalfa Crop Improved
by Cutting in the Fall

Alfalfa will stand the winter better and give larger yields of hay the next season, if it is cut in the fall in time to permit a growth of at least one foot high before winter sets in. This growth is necessary for the winter protection afforded and permits the storage of food reserves in the root system so that the next year's crop will start off vigorously and produce a maximum yield of hay. Experience of numerous farmers confirms the recommendation, and, taken with the experimental data, affords the basis for the soundest farm practice in growing and harvesting the crop.

Supply of Manure Limited

While manure is not a balanced plant food, nevertheless it should all be saved and applied economically. Enough manure is not produced to meet the needs of the average farmer where the supply is limited it is better to apply four to six tons per acre over the entire field rather than use a heavy application over a smaller area. The efficiency per ton of manure is greater where the small applications are used.

DELAWARE LEGION
ELECTS SYLVESTER

Delaware is nautical by the necessity of things. With its river and its bay and the ocean, one can easily imagine the entirety of its narrow strip of territory as being thoroughly saturated with the influence of the sea.

Neptune, should he be met walking upon the beach, would probably be recognized there as quickly as Uncle Sam. Or perhaps Uncle Sam, to the Delawarean's mind, is a sort of trident-bearing sea-god himself. It is the most natural thing in the world, then, that American Legionnaires of this sea-dominated state should turn to the navy and select a god for their head for 1925-1926. Earl Sylvester of Harrington is the man upon whom their choice fell.

Mr. Sylvester enlisted in the United States navy on November 14, 1917, as an apprentice seaman. He was discharged on January 29, 1919, as an electrician, first class.

A charter member of Harrington post, No. 7, of the Legion in his home town, Commander Sylvester had been its adjutant since its organization in 1919. He was also its service officer.

He served as a delegate to the national convention at Kansas City in 1921; he was a member of the state executive committee in 1922, and a department vice commander in 1924. He was also local chairman of the campaign for the Legion's $5,000,000 endowment fund for disabled veterans and orphans of the World war.

Mr. Sylvester is a chief clerk in the office of the supervisor of telegraph and signals of the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Railroad company. He entered the service of the Pennsylvania in 1911.

Activities of FidacDuring the Past Year

During the past year considerable progress has been made in assuring the former service men of the World war a voice in deciding questions of peace and war, according to a report from international headquarters of Fidac at Paris which has been received by national headquarters of the American Legion.

Representation at the fifth arms conference at Geneva, closer co-operation with the League of Nations, addition of a woman's auxiliary and of a number of new member associations and work in ascertaining public opinion in allied and former enemy countries, especially following the election of Von Hindenburg as president of Germany, are among the accomplishments set forth.

Fidac advocated the calling of a fifth arms conference. The conference was held at Geneva last May. Fidac was by invitation officially represented at the conference.

The organization was asked by the League of Nations to assist in selecting a veteran to represent former service men in the information section of the league.

When Field Marshal von Hindenburg was elected president of the German republic, the permanent committee on propaganda of Fidac took up an investigation as to the public reaction to his election in both allied and former enemy countries. Their report contributed to lessen anxiety felt in certain places as to the possible effects of the election.

Two French and four Polish veterans' associations, with a combined membership of 580,000, were admitted to membership. Plans for the formation of a woman's auxiliary to Fidac occupied much thought during the year.

Deeds 160-Acre Farm to American Legionnaires

A freak use of the law to prevent mortgaged property from falling into the hands of creditors was resorted to by a resident of Iowa, who deeded a 160-acre farm to the 700,000 American Legionnaires in the country.

The moiety conveyed to each member of the Legion was infinitesimal while the expense to each of them in executing, acknowledging and recording instruments of conveyance would several times exceed the value of the property. The court held the deed void but not criminal.

Tact Is Essential

"Tact," said the lecturer, "is essential to good entertaining. I once dined at a house where the hostess had no tact. Opposite me sat a modest, quiet man.

"Suddenly he turned as red as a lobster on hearing his hostess say to her husband, 'How inattentive you are, Charlie! You must look after Mr. Brown better. He's helping himself to everything.'"

AMUSEMENTS

Every once in a while there suddenly appears on the film horizon a motion picture that offers something new in the way of story and theme. Originality in photoplays, as regards plot, is mighty rare and for that very reason, "Any Woman" Paramount's latest society drama which opened its local engagement at the Met last night deserves to be singled out for special and honorable mention.

This screen play is based on an original film story by Arthur Somers Roche and has for its background the smart society set and the world of big business.

Henry King, who will be remembered as the producer of such notable cinema successes as "The White Sister," "Romola" and others, directed "Any Woman" so that from a technical standpoint, the picture leaves nothing to be desired.

The chief character in the story is Ellen Linden, a very beautiful society girl, admirably portrayed by Alice Terry. The financial failure of her father necessitates her going to work, and she finally manages to land a job as a typist and office assistant with a brokerage firm.

This is the starting point for a series of intensely dramatic situations, for she soon learns that her employers are more interested in her personal charms than in her business ability. The subsequent events the charged with excitement and thrills that eventually lead to a happy conclusion.

Miss Terry is capably supported by a top-notch cast including a new screen "find," Ernest Gillen.

Parents Urged To Guard Youngsters From Traffic Fatalities; One-Fifth Of Victims Less Than 15 Years Old

Parents are asked by one of the large insurance companies to give more active co-operation in preventing accidents to children. Approximately twenty per cent of all fatal accidents last year claimed as victims children under fifteen years of age.

The company calls the attention of parents to this fact now that they have returned to the cities with their children for the opening of school. Most cities and towns are still in the trying to protect the lives of children by placing warning signs to motorists at school crossings. Many communities have a policeman stationed at such crossings during the hours of arriving and departure. But these same children, who are guarded by the state, are permitted to be unprotected in the streets with hardly a word of caution from their parents.

The illustration points out the danger to children that can be caused by careless drivers, playing with their toys and the streets. The illustration shows a car passing a child who is playing with a ball. The car is labeled "DANGER" and the child is labeled "CHILDREN".

PREVENTIVE MEASURES

Salt Injures Soil
The bureau of soils says that the application of rock salt upon driveway will injure the soil for a radius of about three feet. If the roots of a neighbor's trees or shrubs extend under the driveway, rock salt will be poison to them. Otherwise, it will not hurt his property unless the rain washes this substance over onto his land.

Punishment
The object of punishment is prevention from evil; it never can be made impulsive to good.—Mann.

Country Boy Recalls Youthful Hardships

"You ask me my hardest battle," said Dave Patrick of Saco. "Well, sir, the toughest experience in my career was trying to get enough to eat, and never shall I forget it if I live to be as old as Methuselah. In 1888, when I was a boy of seven years, my parents sent me to the farm of a friend (?) of theirs in Saco village to work for my board. I surely got plenty of the former, but, believe me, the latter was way below par from what a youngster requires, says the Kennebec Journal.

"The women folks had no time to prepare meals, being busy making articles of clothing to sell, that being the custom in those days, and the men folks, who worked in the shingle mill, had to take pot luck with what they got to eat, so you can easily imagine how I fared. I never had more than two meals a day, and many times not that number.

"All I had to do was to take care of eight cows, two horses, a large number of hens and chickens and guinea hens, the latter keeping me more than busy chasing them back to the premises from the road. As a sideline I had the wood and water to carry, the latter necessity being brought from a well an eighth of a mile distant.

"Almost barefoot with the old shoes I was provided with, every toe on both feet became frozen, the blisters becoming so painful I took a pair of shears and clipped off the end of my toes to let the water in the blisters out. I have never fully recovered from this experience, my feet to this day being so tender that I am obliged to wear woolen stockings the year around.

"I stood the hardships I was subjected to for over a year until one day Thomas Sands of Saco came to the next farm to visit relatives, when I begged him to take me back home with him, which he did. You can easily imagine what a tickled boy I was when I landed with my father and mother once more. There, mister, is a tough experience and, take it from me, it was tough."

Corn Combinations.

Corn furnishes heat and energy to the body and is therefore so valuable as a winter food, that the housewife wishes to use corn over and over again. It can be made to seem like a different dish by serving it in combinations with cheese, egg, tomatoes or sausage, and such a dish, cooked in casserole is very nearly a complete meal. For sausage and corn pudding, beat up a can of corn with an egg or two, season with Worcestershire sauce, paprika and salt, and then bake under a sausage covering in a moderate oven.

Saw the Light

They were talking over their summer plans. "And another thing," proclaimed Mrs. Thompson. "I've decided I'm going to learn to swim this summer." Her husband puffed thoughtfully at his cigar before replying, "It's all right with me, my dear. That explains to me why you took up dieting."

A HOME-MADE DUST-PAN

When without a dustpan, many housewives sweep or brush the dust up on a paper. This is not very satisfactory, for the dust often goes under instead of on the paper. A very good dustpan can be made out of a pastboard box the shape of the ones in which soapflakes come. Remove without tearing one end of the box; cut one of the broad sides back about five inches, and take it off, leaving the rest of the side to serve as a cover to prevent the dust from flying out when put in the box. The long, narrow end of the box makes a fine scraper to use when removing the dust from the floor to this novel and very satisfactory dustpan.

Caloric Requirements of the Child

DETITIANS declare that the average boy or girl of four years should receive about forty calories a pound of body weight per day. The average weight of a child of four years is forty pounds. Therefore the total caloric requirement would be approximately 1,600 calories. Caloric is merely the name for a certain measure of heat derived from the burning of food.

Necessarily, the caloric requirement of the child is dependent on his temperament, since a child who plays hard and long requires more nourishment than one who leads a quieter life. Rate of growth also has a bearing on caloric requirements. The child who is growing rapidly should be given more food to meet his caloric needs than the boy or girl whose growth is normal.

Mothers know the daily diet should consist of the essential foodstuffs, protein, carbohydrates, fats, minerals and water. The important thing for her is to learn the foods that contain these essentials in a balanced diet. Below is a well-balanced menu for any child six years old compiled by an authority on home economics.

 Children often become wearied of drinking plain milk. Mixing their milk with fruit juices is a welcome change. Following is the recipe for a refreshing milk drink: Mix 3/4 cupful orange juice, 1/4 cupful evaporated milk, three teaspoonfuls of sugar, 1/2 teaspoonful of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Shake well in a fruit jar before serving.

 "I lend it to a man," answered Diogenes; "and if he returns it I know he's one in ten thousand. You see, the lantern test is the best available. The umbrella has not yet been invented."

Feeding Soy Beans to Poultry Flocks

Rich in Protein, but Lacking in Minerals.

Soy beans have a place in the poultry ration, according to poultry experts at Purdue university. A study covering a four-year period with approximately 1,000 birds of the White Leghorn and Barred Rock breeds shows that in general the soy beans need a mineral supplement to go with the beans if they are to equal tankage and other animal protein supplements.

Tankage carries about 60 per cent of protein and 20 per cent mineral. Soy beans are rich in protein, but carry only about 6 per cent of minerals. The Purdue investigation shows, however, that a mash mixture composed of 50 pounds bran, 50 pounds of middlings and 45 pounds of soy bean oil meal with 10 per cent of a mineral mixture composed of 22 pounds acid phosphate, 24 pounds limestone and 15 pounds of salt will give about the same results as 30 pounds of tankage mixed with the bran and middlings.

In the 1923 experiment the birds fed on the soy bean and mineral ration produced 137.5 eggs; the tankage-fed birds produced 131.9 eggs and the birds fed on soy beans without minerals produced only 27.2 eggs per bird. The Purdue standard grain ration, composed of 100 pounds corn, 100 pounds wheat and 50 pounds oats, was fed with these mash rations. This experimental work is described in Purdue bulletin No. 293, which can be obtained from the university at Lafayette, Ind.

Prevent Barn Drafts by Using Good Air Flues

Special provisions for the ventilation of dairy barns are important, according to observations made by the rural engineering department of the State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

Cracks or openings, even including open windows, do not provide controlled movement of air; hence, they do not provide good ventilation. They allow a change of air, but with it excessive cooling and drafts in cold weather. Since ventilation should be under control, a system of intake and out-take flues equipped with dampers is necessary. Such flues may be built by the owner or bought as a complete system.

Tests have shown that in order to maintain the proper standard of purity and to carry away the moisture which is given off through the cow's respiratory processes, 50 cubic feet of air a minute are needed. To supply this amount of air, about one-fourth square foot opening in both the intake and the out-take flues is required. This figure is based on flues about 20 feet high.

Flues should go as directly as possible from barn to ventilator cupola at the ridge, as any angle or slope of the flue retards the air. Since the flues must be airtight, they should be made of two layers of boards with building paper between. With such flues the movement of air may be regulated by means of dampers.

Intakes should be located on opposite sides of the barn, because of the changing direction of winds.

Solve the Silo Problem in Various Communities

Probably the strongest objection to the use of the silo is the labor necessary at filling time. However, records show that it requires practically the same amount of total labor to harvest the entire corn plant in any other manner. It is simply a case of mobilizing enough labor at one time, instead of using all fall and part of the winter to do it. Many communities solve the problem by working together with their available labor and in some cases hiring a few extra men. Of course the more help one has, the faster the job. In a few days' time the fields are cleared for wheat or rye seeding, and the feed is stored for the winter. The big advantage is larger feed value obtained from the silage as compared to any other method of harvesting.

Farm Hints

Noxious weeds, like diseases, should be eradicated.

Good prices are stimulating wheat production throughout the world.

Loving your neighbor isn't so easy if he's the sort who won't co-operate.

How many colts have you seen on farms during the past few years? Indications point to high prices for horses during the next decade.

All sweet potato growers would greatly increase their yields if they would practice careful seed selection at digging time. This must be done before frost.

One farmer cut four seven-foot posts from black locust that had been planted only eighteen years. Locust will help solve the fence-post problem now that chestnut is gone.

Grasshoppers deposit their eggs during the fall in the hard soil along roadsides, fence rows, and other undisturbed places. The disking of those areas will destroy a large percentage of these eggs.

Chief Proved Worthiness

How did the story of Hercules and the three-headed monster, Cerberus, at the entrance of Hades stagger the youthful imagination? What strength, what daring right at the mouth of the eerie underworld? Yet from British East Africa comes a news dispatch with the story of a native chief who braved a blazing and spitting leopard barehanded. Hercules' story after all is but mythology, but Murigo was Trimu's in reality. Leopards had been raiding the kraals. Several of the chief's subjects had been killed. One morning the alarm was given and Trimu, seven feet tall and a giant in strength, ran from his hut and, seeing the leopard mauling two natives, tackled him with his bare hands and tore him to pieces. The natives of British East Africa apparently exercise due common sense when they elect their chiefs.—Pierre Van Paasen in Atlanta Constitution.

Hunting in Siberia

Hunting is still of considerable economic importance over large parts of Siberia, particularly in the tundra and the forest regions. In some localities it is the chief means of livelihood, while in others it supplements fishing and farming. Sparse population favors the survival of fur-bearing animals, but the supply is decreasing as the country becomes more thickly settled. In consequence of the increase in the number of hunters and the more intensive methods of hunting fur-bearing animals are killed faster than they multiply.

This destruction has led the Russian government to restrict the hunting of wild animals and birds. Animal sanctuaries have been established. It is difficult, however, to enforce hunting laws over such a vast territory inhabited by so primitive a people.

Slants on Life

By J. A. WALDRON

The Unexpected

"YOU here? Well! This surprise is joyous!" He beamed upon her.

"Joyous!"

"Perfectly rapturous!"

"What enthusiasm! When did you arrive?"

"An hour ago. But was I not always enthusiastic where you were concerned?"

"You were enthusiastic, I remember, when you suddenly disappeared from New York." She cast down her eyes, but she still wore a smile.

"Where have you been?"

"Just got back from South America. But my enthusiasm has returned with me." He looked at her ardently.

"Do you imagine you are the only man in whom I have seen enthusiasm?"

"Naturally not. Men have eyes and other senses. You are more attractive than ever."

They had met at Redondo Beach, on the Pacific. She looked at him and still smiled, but with a certain air of reservation. "And yet you went away without a word to me, and for a year I have not heard from you, Mr. Henderson."

"Plain mister, eh?"

"Quite proper, isn't it? Things have happened since I saw you." She fingered a miniature pendant upon a chain at her throat. He peered at it.

"A man's portrait. Whose?"

"My husband's. Let me introduce you to Mrs. Hickett. Delighted to meet you, Mr. Henderson, in my new character. I know you are pleased to see me again, for you have said it with lovely adjectives."

"Miriam!"

Her name was shouted from the verge of the sea below them. Henderson looked for the source of the call and saw a bullet-headed, athletic male looking up at them. Miriam did not seem to hear.

"I think that person down there called you," suggested Henderson, who had lost a phase of his smile.

"Mr. Hickett."

"Why," and Henderson again peered at the miniature, "he doesn't look exactly like this."

"No man looks the same in a bathing costume."

"You certainly didn't marry this man for his physical harmony and grace."

"You think that a shrewd conclusion, I suppose. He is worth ten millions."

"Well, that sum, even with his name, is passable. It would be passable to most women."

"It didn't pass me. You remember, don't you, that you disappeared suddenly? And I don't believe you have one million."

"But I have some other advantages. I believe he is calling you again." Mr. Hickett was calling again.

Mrs. Hickett turned and waved a hand at Mr. Hickett. "Yes, I heard him this time."

"But why didn't you hear him before?"

"Just a notion. I sometimes pretend I'm hard of hearing and that my sight is poor. If I didn't pretend my sight was poor I should see a lot of things that hurt a woman's vanity, even if she is not madly in love with her husband. Now Mr. Hickett, as you can see with half an eye, is fond of other pretty women. There are two with him at the moment. I don't care to go into the water with him, for he is un-gallant enough to pay more attention to others than he does to me. And at the dances he always ignores me as long as there is another slightly woman to be had. Perhaps these aberrations, as I may call them, are because he is married to me. Besides, if he sees me even talking to a good-looking fellow like you—especially to a bachelor, for bachelors, he says, have neither obligations nor consciences—he rages. But let's go down and I'll introduce you."

As Mrs. Hickett and Mr. Henderson walked slowly to the shore he spoke rapidly in low tones to her, but she simply laughed. Mr. Hickett apparently misconstrued her joyousness, for he frowned as they approached.

"I'll introduce you first," said Mrs. Hickett, "to a woman I'm sure you'll be delighted to meet. She tells me she has traveled far within a year looking for a husband."

And thus Henderson unexpectedly met Mrs. Henderson, from whom he had spent a year in flight.

Girls Who Wear Them are Flirting With Undertaker Says Dr. C. P. Robbins.

Columbus, O., Dec. 28, (UP)—If Dr. C. P. Robbins, of the state division of communicable diseases, had his way chiffon hose, satin slippers and other prerequisites of the feminine wardrobe, would be thrown into the discard when the brisk breeze of winter begin to blow.

"The girls who wear those things these cold days, are flirting with the undertaker," Dr. Robbins told the United Press. "If these foolish girls do not come down with hard colds, they are running the risk of catching pneumonia or chronic catarrh."

Dr. Robbins holds that one of the fundamentals of good health is to keep the feet and ankles warm. "That can't be done with transparent hose and cloth shoes," he declared.

Japanese Women Lawyers?

Japanese women will be allowed to practice law in the courts of the empire if a measure advocated by the woman suffrage party receives the approval of the next diet session. Discussing the proposed bill, which would put women barristers on the same plane as the male members of the bar, one of the leaders of the woman suffrage party said: "Women have proved to be good doctors and they are certainly better fitted to deal with crimes and home problems than men because they understand them better. The argument that women are too sentimental is ridiculous."

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY OF PRESIDENT

Woodrow Wilson Fittingly Observed in Five Hundred Cities of Country.

Washington, Dec. 28, (UP)—Five years ago today the United States was locked in bitter debate over the proposal made by President Woodrow Wilson for American participation in the League of Nations.

Today, upon the 69th anniversary of his birth, while thousands thruout the nation are performing services in his honor, the senate—with many of the old characters of that league conflict still on the stage, is approaching some steps in international relations to which he first pointed the way.

Simple functions of commemoration are being performed by organizations of his surviving followers; a Wilson postage stamp was placed on sale and scores visited his tomb in the cathedral atop Mount St. Albans, overlooking the White House where he lived eight years and the capital where he fought so desperately for a new experiment in international affairs.

Now, somewhat the same struggle, involving the same plot, is being enacted in the senate. There his chief supporters, Senators Swanson, Virginia, Democrat, and Walsh, Montana, Democrat, are leading a fight for American participation in the World Court. The leading opponents are: Senator Borah, Idaho, Republican; Hiram Johnson, California, Republican, and Jim Reed, Missouri, Democrat, fighting the court in the belief that it is an organ of the league.

There will be little public ceremony in honor of Wilson.

In memory of the late president, the government issued a seventeen cent stamp, engraved in banknote black with his portrait. The new stamp was placed on sale today at four postoffices. The first stamp was sold at Staunton, Virginia, the birthplace of Wilson, the second at Princeton, New Jersey, where he lived when elected president, the third at Washington where he was inaugurated and the fourth at New York, home city of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

Woodrow Wilson stamps will be placed on sale in every postoffice, as soon as supplies can be sent from the bureau of engraving at Washington.

A public dinner will be held in the city of Washington tonight, and Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in the Wilson cabinet, will be the principal speaker.

Adherents of the late Woodrow Wilson and his policies gathered in various sections of Ohio Monday night and paid tribute to the late president on his birthday anniversary. In five hundred cities Wilson admirers, both Democrats and Republicans, took part in the service.

Aged Woman Says Girls Swimming Is Age Wonder

Boston.—That girls actually go swimming at Nantasket and other public beaches is the greatest change in manners that Mrs. Ezra Brown, one of Cohasset's oldest residents, has noticed in her long life.

The dearly loved elderly lady whose house is a favorite visiting place of the young and old people in the town, declared on the eve of her ninety-second birthday that she doesn't begin to be as much impressed with the radio, automobiles, telephones and other signs of progress that have cropped up during her lifetime as she is with the way young girls have changed their manners.

She only wishes her mother could see the girls of today thinking nothing of disporting themselves on the beach and in the water. The Nantasket of her girlhood was visited only by men bathers, and the girls of her day would rather have died than taken a swim with people present.

MOUND REVEALS PERIOD OF PEACE

Explorers Make Important Discoveries Regarding Ancient Race.

Chillicothe, Ohio.—The autumn season with its uncertain weather conditions called a halt to the excavations in the Slep mound near Bainbridge just as archeologists announced they had made one of the greatest finds in the history of their explorations into the works of the American mound builders.

Until next spring the three-fourths of the mound which has not yet been opened will retain the secret it has held for centuries. During the winter the curators of the Ohio archeological and historical society, Columbus, will study their findings in the burial place of the "Princess of the Pearls."

Bodies to Be Arranged as Found.
The skeletons of the four supposed princes were removed from the platform on which they have long rested, preparatory to their transfer to the society's museum in Columbus. At the museum the bodies will be arranged as they were found a few days ago by H. C. Shetrone, archeological curator.

An ornament which is thought to be an instrument similar to the "pipes of pan" will be studied. If the ornament turns out to be an instrument, it will be the first time any record of the mound builders' musical inclinations has been found.

The discovery of a piece of colored cloth in the mausoleum of the four supposed princes wrote a new chapter in the endeavors of archeologists, for cloth has never before been found in the mounds. Besides the finding of the cloth, imprints of a canopy of fabric were found on the ceiling of the tomb. The intact piece of fabric was found under a copper plate beneath the skull of one of the skeletons. It bore circular designs done in colors of tan, green, black and white, it appeared. When exposed to the warm air, the fabric began to crumble, but not before artists had sketched the design and it had been photographed.

Quarts of Pearls About Bodies.
The early contention of the explorers that the four bodies had been shrouded in a fabric of pearls of varying sizes was borne out by later explorations. When the skeletons were lifted from their resting places, it was found that they had lain on a layer of small pearls, all pierced as if they had been strung or woven together. Several quarts of pearls were swept up and stored away for transportation to the museum.

Scores of fragments of tortoise shells, etched with figures of birds and highly burnished, were uncovered with the bodies. The figure of a swan cut from tortoise shell was found. A necklace of tusks, some of which are the largest ever found in Ohio, was unearthed. There were no weapons found buried with the dead. Curator Shetrone said the absence of weapons in the tomb is another evidence that the mound builders were a peaceable people more devoted to art than other ancient races.

"Big Game" Increasing in the United States

The rangers in the forest service took a census last year of the big game in the federal forests, and the recently published report allays the fear that such game is succumbing to the onslaughts of sportsmen.

"Big game," as technically used, includes antelope, bear, buffalo, elk, moose, mountain goat and mountain sheep. The census covers 159 forests, and for the first time enumerates the bear as big game.

The buffalo, as Americans miscall the bison, was for the first time dropped from the census, as bison in the United States no longer are "game," being in guarded herds. Nor did the rangers reckon game outside of parks and forests, though such animals are numerous.

There are about 5,000 antelope, or prong-horns, chiefly in Arizona and Idaho, though Nevada and Oregon jointly have a great herd not in a federal forest. The bears comprise 5,000 grizzlies, virtually all in Alaska, though Montana has a few, and 38,700 black or brown. Deer number 550,500, increasing by nearly 40,000 in the year. Every forest boasts an increase of elk, the number being 52,600. Moose, however, numbered only 5,100 in 1924, whereas in 1923 there were 8,000. Wild goats and wild sheep numbered, respectively, 17,200 and 12,400, each increasing slightly. The total of big game was 687,000 animals under protection by the national government.

Wild animals left to themselves in protected reserves steadily multiply. The bear is a costly nuisance to farmers and stockmen, but all other big game is harmless and an ornament. It should be given every protection.

Advancement in Tibet

The butter-burning lamps of Lhasa, forbidden city of Tibet, soon will be no more. Their place will be taken, even in the most sacred shrines, by electric lamps, and electricity to light these lamps will be generated by a hydro-electric plant that is now making its way on the backs of pack mules along trails reaching from the Indian border.

BORAH

Voices Protest Against Stifling Free Speech of Americans.

The constant effort to control by law the opinions of the American people and to take away from them their right to assemble peaceably to discuss the affairs of the nation is assailed by Senator William E. Borah of Idaho in an article in Liberty.

"Our institutions must and, in my opinion, can stand the test of experience; they must and, in my opinion, can undergo without impairment the scrutiny, even the scourge, of every delusion, or mad scheme, which the restless and discontented may advance," says Senator Borah. "But they cannot survive the denial of free speech, the destruction of a free press, or the refusal to permit the people to assemble and present their views or grievances."

"These principles, with the other guaranties of the Constitution, are indispensable to the maintenance of our government. We cannot expect in these times of ceaseless inquiry and intellectual turmoil, when the very foundations of human belief are assailed, that our form of government, our political creed, will escape inquiry as to their worth and their efficiency."

"I do not myself believe it necessary in defending American institutions and American principles to adopt the instruments of warfare of either the fascists or the communists."

"I would many times rather meet those who openly challenge our institutions and offer some other plan in lieu of ours than to have engrafted on our system a practice which is at war with every principle upon which our government rests. It seems to me to betray a lack of faith in the worth of the principles which we profess, and in the intelligence and character of the people who must sustain those principles."

Cross-Word Puzzles Boon to Golf Widow

It already has been suggested that cross-word puzzles are the almost providential and overdue instruments of vengeance ready to the hands of wives who have long suffered from golfing husbands. The fact that a wife is daily getting bogey for the solution of puzzles in the newspaper points the moral further. The golf widow can now be tied with the cross-word puzzle widower.

Evening conversations in the home should begin to have two sides and should run somewhat as follows:

"Sorry to be late for dinner, dear. Had to get in 18 holes."

"You're not late. Dinner's not ready yet. Had to fill in the last 18 squares in my puzzle."

"Well, that's all right. I had a great game. Made bogey on two holes. Say, do you realize what bogey is on the fourth?"

"Eleven, isn't it?"

"What! Eleven strokes?"

"No, silly. Eleven minutes for the fourth puzzle."

"I'm talking about golf."

"But let me tell you about the third puzzle I worked on today. It has the sweetest interlock!"

"Shush! On the fourteenth I had Jeff one down and—"

"Two across. Now it's time you're listening to me after all these years of golf monologue. Lend an ear. On the sixteenth square across I was, as you might say, in a trap to think of a word of five letters meaning a Tyrolean outcry. What do you know? It was 'yodel.' After that I fooled a personal pronoun and got lost in the rough of the lower left-hand corner. Well, I got out of trouble, but it cost me three minutes."

"What a lot of drive! You ought to have seen me today after I'd sliced—"

"—sharpened it and addressed the—"

"—with the deuce of a pretty niblick I—"

"—guessed the word was 'orthogonal'—"

"—after which I sunk a long—"

"—key word. One minute to play!"

"Blah!"

"Blah yourself!"

(A tribute of half an hour's silence.)

"Well, my dear, what's the latest dirt on the neighbors?"

"It's quite interesting, dear. I'll be glad to tell you. But first tell me what the boss said down at the office today."—Fairfax Downey, in New York Herald-Tribune.

Vienna Exports Coins

The output of the Vienna mint in 1924 was the greatest since its foundation, according to a report of the budget committee of the national assembly. Only a comparatively few of the coins struck, however, were for Austrian account, the bulk going to Poland, Bulgaria, North and East Africa and even Afghanistan, in the shape of the old Maria Theresa dollar. Altogether, the Vienna mint turned out 341,000,000 coins, calling for 7,000 pounds of silver every day of the year.

Happy Endings Win

Patrons of motion pictures in Australia greatly prefer American films to the home product. The happy ending seems to get the money all the world around. Though the unhappy ending may be logical and artistic, most human beings seeking in places of amusement a refuge from the harsh realities of every day do care for them.

GOLDEN RULE AND WORLD PEACE

By DR. S. PARKES CADMAN

President of the Federal Council of Churches

In this powerful appeal for the adoption of the Golden Rule as a guiding principle in international relations, the great radio preacher holds up as an example in constructive international charity the work of the Near East Relief, which makes its annual appeal for the support of the American people on Golden Rule Sunday, observed annually in December.

NOTHING in the history of the American people of recent years so becomes them as their attitude towards the unhappy and persecuted people who have been the beneficiaries of the great work of the Near East Relief. At this season when the annual appeal for the support of this work is made, through the observance of Golden Rule Sunday, it is an overwhelmingly gratifying thing to hear the reports of the triumphs and successes of this philanthropy.

I have been hearing of the horrors of the Near East from the days of my cal promises have not always been realized, at any rate we have tried to retain the credit of our people by contributing generously to this work, which we must continue to sustain.

As a churchman, I may be permitted to point out that the Near East Relief has contributed enormously to the cause of church unity. At Stockholm a few weeks ago I had the privilege of conferring with all the patriarchs and metropolitans and archbishops of the Greek church. They assured me that they have been drawn toward the West not by the common early youth, when Mr. Gladstone conducted his memorable campaign in which he denounced the Turk and urged that the Turks should be thrust bag and baggage out of their country. The horrors have continued ever since, but our country has been an instrument in alleviating them by contributions out of its abundance to the crucial need of the distressed orphans and what few unhappy relatives they have left to them.

We can do no better thing than to give for those who are in need, and thus make such merchandise out of our material welfare as to have credentials for the life which is to come. I do not take the attitude that there is anything much to praise about the American people in this matter, though I am proud of them, as we all are. It would have been a strange thing if we had not done as we have done.

When you think of the millions which are squandered in this country upon feminine devices for beautifying—which do not always succeed in realizing their object—when you think of the vast cost of trying to make mutton look like lamb, when you think of the multitude of surplus things with which we surround ourselves in daily life, and then see this work for far-off children, I think you will agree with me that even though our political consent of intellectual minds nor by the doctors of the church, but rather through the work of Near East Relief. That work has won the hearts of great bishops as well as refugees and politicians. Truly we have seen the truth of the saying that a little child shall lead them. The little Armenian orphan, Zadi, whom thousands have heard sing and talk at the preliminary Golden Rule dinners in a hundred cities of this country, is a five-year-old representation of thousands of these Eastern peoples, whom we have approached not with theology or dogma but with those deeds of mercy which are the very essence of true religion.

There is a lesson of world peace in this philanthropic approach to the hearts of men. We must follow it up, with this decision—that we will not allow the state in the future to dictate to the church or to any body of men as to what shall be their attitude toward peace and war. We must take our patriotism from the preaching of the prophets. Unless we want a future like this every fifty years to repair the recurrent waves of slaughter and devastation, we must cling to the spirit of the Golden Rule. The quality of mercy is not strained. It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven. I bless him that gives and him that takes. It becomes the throned monarch arch better than his crown.

The GOLDEN RULE in PRACTICE

A series of articles by prominent leaders on the Golden Rule as a guide in International Relations.

PLAIN LIVING AND HIGH THINKING

By CHARLES V. VICKREY

General Secretary of the Near East Relief

THE GOLDEN RULE is a universal creed. Everybody accepts it. Most people try to practice it.

Golden Rule Sunday is examination day—a day of plain living and high thinking; of self-measurement by the Golden Rule to see how big we really are.

Golden Rule Sunday comes midway between the feasts of Thanksgiving and Christmas.

On Thanksgiving Day we satisfy ourselves with good things. We survey our broad acres, bulging granaries, and busy factories. We reappraise our unprecedented and soaring wealth of more than three hundred billion dollars, far transcending anything previously or elsewhere known in all the world. Not least are we thankful for government under which life and property are safe. Truly no people ever had as great reason for gratitude as have we in America on Thanksgiving Day, 1925.

At Christmas we again indulge in feasting and mirth, and share some of our luxuries with relatives and friends, some of whom are sore perplexed to know where to store the gifts that we pour into their well provided homes.

But on Golden Rule Sunday we express our gratitude and practice "pure religion undefiled before God" in a more vital way by considering "the fatherless and widows in their affliction" who, as worthy as we, by the vicissitudes of war, are bereft of everything. They have no lands, no granaries, no bank accounts, no savings, no employment, no homes, no food, except as the Golden Rule proves a vital reality in their lives. It is proposed that on Golden Rule

Sunday, all persons who are disposed to make a practical application of the Golden Rule, provide for their Sunday dinner approximately the same menu that is provided, when funds permit, by Near East Relief for the tens of thousands of orphaned children in its care, most of whom are under twelve years of age.

Having partaken of the orphanage meal and entered into fellowship with the children overseas, we are asked to make such provision for them for the 365 days of the year as we should like to have made for ourselves, or for our children, if conditions were reversed.

Golden Rule Sunday will be observed throughout the United States in December, on behalf of the Near East Relief. This series of articles, by prominent public men who are supporters and spokesmen for this great philanthropy, is designed to call public attention to the background and purpose of the work for general support.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Two Essentials
of Sweet CloverFor Soil-Building Purposes
It Supplies Organic Matter and Nitrogen.

When sweet clover is grown solely for soil-building purposes the question often arises as to when one should plow it under. As a fertilizer, sweet clover furnishes two essentials of a good soil—organic matter and nitrogen. The maximum amount of organic matter is undoubtedly obtained from sweet clover the second year when it comes into bloom. Prof. C. J. Willard of the Ohio experiment station, however, says that the maximum amount of nitrogen is obtained about May 1, the second year after seeding. Between that date and the full-bloom stage much of the nitrogen in the roots is transferred to the tops without increasing the total amount in the crop.

Tests for Nitrogen.

"In one experiment," says Professor Willard, "we sowed the clover with the oats on April 6, 1922. The same fall after the oats were harvested we began analyzing the plants—roots and stems—for nitrogen. These tests were repeated throughout the following spring and summer. A study of the resulting figures shows that during the period of greatest top growth there is a rapid transfer of the nitrogen from the roots to the tops. The roots, therefore, serve as a storehouse for the nitrogen during the winter, emptying the nitrogen into the green tops in the early spring. By the first of May there is practically as much nitrogen in the plant as at any time during the second year's growth. To grow 100 bushels of corn requires about 150 pounds of nitrogen for grain and stover. Turning under a good stand of sweet clover during the month of April will add something like 175 pounds of nitrogen, or more than enough to supply this large corn yield."

Tests Worth Remembering.

The above statements, based as they are upon carefully conducted tests, are worth remembering. It is not always convenient to postpone plowing under sweet clover till the spring, but it should be done wherever possible, first, because, as the above shows, one gets about all the nitrogen possible at that time; and second, also because one gets about all the organic matter that can be plowed under to advantage and be of use to the corn crop that same year. Third, when biennial sweet clover is plowed under after it has started to grow the second spring it will not bother as a weed. If plowed under in the fall after seeding in the spring it will come up as a weed the following spring.

Harvesting and Storing
Navy Beans for Winter

Navy beans should be harvested and threshed as soon as ready and if infested with bugs they may be treated by one of several methods. Fumigation with carbon bisulphide, using the chemical at the rate of about one ounce to the bushel, is very satisfactory. This should be done in a tight container when the temperature is 75 degrees or above. The chemical is inflammable and fires of all kind should be kept away. Heating for an hour in an oven with the temperature from 125 to 130 degrees will also kill the insects. Seed can be safely stored by sifting one part of air-slaked lime with twice the quantity of seed.

Birds Control Insects
in Garden and Orchard

Set the birds up to housekeeping and they will work for you—that, in brief is the idea conveyed in a news letter from the United States Department of Agriculture. The letter cites the example of 2,000 nests supplied for birds on the Baron von Berlepsch estate in Germany and the escape of this estate from the leaf-roller when trees on other estates were defoliated. Evidently the birds kept the insects under control. Says the letter of the United States Department of Agriculture: "Experience has shown that those who have increased the number of birds on their property have had cause for satisfaction rather than regret."

Alfalfa Crop Improved
by Cutting in the Fall

Alfalfa will stand the winter better and give larger yields of hay the next season, if it is cut in the fall in time to permit a growth of at least one foot high before winter sets in. This growth is necessary for the winter protection afforded and permits the storage of food reserves in the root system so that the next year's crop will start off vigorously and produce a maximum yield of hay. Experience of numerous farmers confirms the recommendation, and, taken with the experimental data, affords the basis for the soundest farm practice in growing and harvesting the crop.

Supply of Manure Limited

While manure is not a balanced plant food, nevertheless it should all be saved and applied economically. Enough manure is not produced to meet the needs of the average farmer. Where the supply is limited it is better to apply four to six tons per acre over the entire field rather than use a heavy application over a smaller area. The efficiency per ton of manure is greater where the small applications are used.

Legion

DELAWARE LEGION
ELECTS SYLVESTER

Delaware is nautical by the necessity of things. With its river and its bay and the ocean, one can easily imagine the entirety of its narrow strip of territory as being thoroughly saturated with the influence of the sea.

Neptune, should he be met walking upon the beach, would probably be recognized there as quickly as Uncle Sam. Or perhaps Uncle Sam, to the Delawarean's mind, is a sort of trident-bearing sea-god himself.

It is the most natural thing in the world, then, that American Legionnaires of this sea-dominated state should turn to the navy and select a gob for their head for 1925-1926. Earl Sylvester of Harrington is the man upon whom their choice fell.

Mr. Sylvester enlisted in the United States navy on November 14, 1917, as an apprentice seaman. He was discharged on January 23, 1919, as an electrician, first class.

A charter member of Harrington post, No. 7, of the Legion in his home town, Commander Sylvester had been its adjutant since its organization in 1919. He was also its service officer.

He served as a delegate to the national convention at Kansas City in 1921; he was a member of the state executive committee in 1922, and a department vice commander in 1924. He was also local chairman of the campaign for the Legion's $5,000,000 endowment fund for disabled veterans and orphans of the World war.

Mr. Sylvester is a chief clerk in the office of the supervisor of telegraph and signals of the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Railroad company. He entered the service of the Pennsylvania in 1911.

Activities of Fidac

During the Past Year

During the past year considerable progress has been made in assuring the former service men of the World war a voice in deciding questions of peace and war, according to a report from international headquarters of Fidac at Paris which has been received by national headquarters of the American Legion.

Representation at the fifth arms conference at Geneva, closer co-operation with the League of Nations, addition of a woman's auxiliary and of a number of new member associations and work in ascertaining public opinion in allied and former enemy countries, especially following the election of Von Hindenburg as president of Germany, are among the accomplishments set forth.

Fidac advocated the calling of a fifth arms conference. The conference was held at Geneva last May. Fidac was by invitation officially represented at the conference.

The organization was asked by the League of Nations to assist in selecting a veteran to represent former service men in the information section of the league.

When Field Marshal von Hindenburg was elected president of the German republic, the permanent committee on propaganda of Fidac took up an investigation as to the public reaction to his election in both allied and former enemy countries. Their report contributed to lessen anxiety felt in certain places as to the possible effects of the election.

Two French and four Polish veterans' associations, with a combined membership of 580,000, were admitted to membership. Plans for the formation of a woman's auxiliary to Fidac occupied much thought during the year.

Deeds 160-Acre Farm to
American Legionnaires

A freak use of the law to prevent mortgaged property from falling into the hands of creditors was resorted to by a resident of Iowa, who deeded a 160-acre farm to the 700,000 American Legionnaires in the country.

The moiety conveyed to each member of the Legion was infinitesimal while the expense to each of them in executing, acknowledging and recording instruments of conveyance would several times exceed the value of the property. The court held the deed void but not criminal.

Tact Is Essential

"Tact," said the lecturer, "is essential to good entertaining. I once dined at a house where the hostess had no tact. Opposite me sat a modest, quiet man.

"Suddenly he turned as red as a lobster on hearing his hostess say to her husband, 'How inattentive you are, Charlie! You must look after Mr. Brown better. He's helping himself to everything.'"

AMUSEMENTS

Every once in a while there suddenly appears on the film horizon a motion picture that offers something new in the way of story and theme. Originality in photoplays, as regards plot, is mighty rare and for that very reason, "Any Woman" Paramount's latest society drama which opened its local engagement at the Met last night deserves to be singled out for special and honorable mention.

This screen play is based on an original film story by Arthur Somers Roche and has for its background the smart society set and the world of big business.

Henry King, who will be remembered as the producer of such notable cinema successes as "The White Sister," "Romola" and others, directed "Any Woman" so that from a technical standpoint, the picture leaves nothing to be desired.

The chief character in the story is Ellen Linden, a very beautiful society girl, admirably portrayed by Alice Terry. The financial failure of her father necessitates her going to work, and she finally manages to land a job as a typist and office assistant with a brokerage firm.

This is the starting point for a series of intensely dramatic situations, for she soon learns that her employers are more interested in her personal charms than in her business ability. The subsequent events the charged with excitement and thrills that eventually lead to a happy conclusion.

Miss Terry is capably supported by a top-notch cast including a new screen "find," Ernest Gillen.

Country Boy Recalls

Youthful Hardships

"You ask me my hardest battle," said Dave Patrick of Saco. "Well, sir, the toughest experience in my career was trying to get enough to eat, and never shall I forget it if I live to be as old as Methuselah. In 1898, when I was a boy of seven years, my parents sent me to the farm of a friend (?) of theirs in Saco village to work for my board. I surely got plenty of the former, but, believe me, the latter was way below par from what a youngster requires, says the Kennebec Journal.

"The women folks had no time to prepare meals, being busy making articles of clothing to sell, that being the custom in those days, and the men folks, who worked in the shingle mill, had to take pot luck with what they got to eat, so you can easily imagine how I fared. I never had more than two meals a day, and many times not that number.

"All I had to do was to take care of eight cows, two horses, a large number of hens and chickens and guinea hens, the latter keeping me more than busy chasing them back to the premises from the road. As a sideline I had the wood and water to carry, the latter necessity being brought from a well an eighth of a mile distant.

"Almost barefoot with the old shoes I was provided with, every toe on both feet became frozen, the blisters becoming so painful I took a pair of shears and clipped off the end of my toes to let the water in the blisters out. I have never fully recovered from this experience, my feet to this day being so tender that I am obliged to wear woolen stockings the year around.

"I stood the hardships I was subjected to for over a year until one day Thomas Sands of Saco came to the next farm to visit relatives, when I begged him to take me back home with him, which he did. You can easily imagine what a tickled boy I was when I landed with my father and mother once more. There, mister, is a tough experience and, take it from me, it was tough."

Parents Urged To Guard Youngsters From Traffic Fatalities; One-Fifth Of Victims Less Than 15 Years Old

Parents are asked by one of the large insurance companies to give more active co-operation in preventing accidents to children. Approximately twenty per cent of all fatal accidents last year claimed as victims children under fifteen years of age.

The company calls the attention of parents to this fact now that they have returned to the cities with their children for the opening of school. Most cities and towns are doing their part in trying to protect the lives of children by placing warning signs to motorists at school crossings. Many communities have a policeman stationed at such crossings during the hours of arriving and departure. But these same children, who are protected by the state, are permitted to run unchaperoned in the streets with hardly a word of caution from their parents.

The illustration points out the danger of children playing in the streets. It shows a car approaching a child who is playing in the street. The car is labeled "DANGER" and the child is labeled "CHILDREN".

Parents must impress upon their children the danger of playing in the streets. In conclusion, the company recommends that while there is much road and in streets where there is safety work being done to combat the amount of traffic if there are these conditions outside influence is to be an appreciable reduction in accidents.

Salt Injures Soil
The bureau of soils says that the application of rock salt upon driveway will injure the soil for a radius of about three feet. If the roots of a neighbor's trees or shrubs extend under the driveway, rock salt will be poison to them. Otherwise, it will not hurt his property unless the rain washes this substance over onto his land.

Punishment
The object of punishment is prevention from evil; it never can be made impulsive to good.—Mann.

Corn Combinations.

Corn furnishes heat and energy to the body and is therefore so valuable as a winter food, that the housewife wishes to use corn over and over again. It can be made to seem like a different dish by serving it in combinations with cheese, egg, tomatoes or sausage, and such a dish, cooked in casserole is very nearly a complete meal. For sausage and corn pudding, beat up a can of corn with an egg or two, season with Worcestershire sauce, paprika and salt, and then bake under a sausage covering in a moderate oven.

Saw the Light

They were talking over their summer plans. "And another thing," proclaimed Mrs. Thompson. "I've decided I'm going to learn to swim this summer." Her husband puffed thoughtfully at his cigar before replying, "It's all right with me, my dear. That explains to me why you took up dieting."

A HOME-MADE DUST-PAN

When without a dustpan, many housewives sweep or brush the dust up on a paper. This is not very satisfactory, for the dust often goes under instead of on the paper. A very good dustpan can be made out of a pastboard box the shape of the ones in which soapflakes come. Remove without tearing one end of the box; cut one of the broad sides back about five inches, and take it off, leaving the rest of the side to serve as a cover to prevent the dust from flying out when put in the box. The long, narrow end of the box makes a fine scraper to use when removing the dust from the floor to this novel and very satisfactory dustpan.

Caloric Requirements of the Child

DIETITIANS declare that the average boy or girl of four years should receive about forty calories a pound of body weight per day. The average weight of a child of four years is forty pounds. Therefore the total caloric requirement would be approximately 1,600 calories. Calory is merely the name for a certain measure of heat derived from the burning of food.

Necessarily, the caloric requirement of the child is dependent on his temperament, since a child who plays hard and long requires more nourishment than one who leads a quieter life. Rate of growth also has a bearing on caloric requirements. The child who is growing rapidly should be given more food to meet his caloric needs than the boy or girl whose growth is normal.

Mothers know the daily diet should consist of the essential foodstuffs, protein, carbohydrates, fats, minerals and water. The important thing for her is to learn the foods that contain these essentials in a balanced diet. Below is a well-balanced menu for any child six years old compiled by an authority on home economics.

 Children often become wearied of drinking plain milk. Mixing their milk with fruit juices is a welcome change. Following is the recipe for a refreshing milk drink: Mix 3/4 cupful orange juice, 1/4 cupful evaporated milk, three teaspoonfuls of sugar, 1/2 teaspoonful of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Shake well in a fruit jar before serving.

Diogenes and His Lantern

"How do you use a lantern in your search for an honest man?" asked the citizen.

A Swedish lumber company recently celebrated its seven hundredth anniversary. It is said to be the oldest lumber concern in existence. Feeding Soy Beans to Poultry Flocks Rich in Protein, but Lacking in Minerals.

Soy beans have a place in the poultry ration, according to poultry experts at Purdue university. A study covering a four-year period with approximately 1,000 birds of the White Leghorn and Barred Rock breeds shows that in general the soy beans need a mineral supplement to go with the beans if they are to equal tankage and other animal protein supplements.

Tankage carries about 60 per cent of protein and 20 per cent mineral. Soy beans are rich in protein, but carry only about 6 per cent of minerals. The Purdue investigation shows, however, that a mash mixture composed of 50 pounds bran, 50 pounds of middlings and 45 pounds of soy bean oil meal with 10 per cent of a mineral mixture composed of 22 pounds acid phosphate, 24 pounds limestone and 15 pounds of salt will give about the same results as 30 pounds of tankage mixed with the bran and middlings.

In the 1923 experiment the birds fed on the soy bean and mineral ration produced 137.5 eggs; the tankage-fed birds produced 131.9 eggs and the birds fed on soy beans without minerals produced only 27.2 eggs per bird. The Purdue standard grain ration, composed of 100 pounds corn, 100 pounds wheat and 50 pounds oats, was fed with these mash rations. This experimental work is described in Purdue bulletin No. 293, which can be obtained from the university at Lafayette, Ind.

Prevent Barn Drafts by Using Good Air Flues

Special provisions for the ventilation of dairy barns are important, according to observations made by the rural engineering department of the State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

Cracks or openings, even including open windows, do not provide controlled movement of air; hence, they do not provide good ventilation. They allow a change of air, but with it excessive cooling and drafts in cold weather. Since ventilation should be under control, a system of intake and out-take flues equipped with dampers is necessary. Such flues may be built by the owner or bought as a complete system.

Tests have shown that in order to maintain the proper standard of purity and to carry away the moisture which is given off through the cow's respiratory processes, 59 cubic feet of air a minute are needed. To supply this amount of air, about one-fourth square foot opening in both the intake and the out-take flues is required. This figure is based on flues about 20 feet high.

Flues should go as directly as possible from barn to ventilator cupola at the ridge, as any angle or slope of the flue retards the air. Since the flues must be airtight, they should be made of two layers of boards with building paper between. With such flues the movement of air may be regulated by means of dampers.

Intakes should be located on opposite sides of the barn, because of the changing direction of winds.

Solve the Silo Problem in Various Communities

Probably the strongest objection to the use of the silo is the labor necessary at filling time. However, records show that it requires practically the same amount of total labor to harvest the entire corn plant in any other manner. It is simply a case of mobilizing enough labor at one time, instead of using all fall and part of the winter to do it. Many communities solve the problem by working together with their available labor and in some cases hiring a few extra men. Of course the more help one has, the faster the job. In a few days' time the fields are cleared for wheat or rye seeding, and the feed is stored for the winter. The big advantage is larger feed value obtained from the silage as compared to any other method of harvesting.

Farm Hints

Noxious weeds, like diseases, should be eradicated.

Good prices are stimulating wheat production throughout the world.

Loving your neighbor isn't so easy if he's the sort who won't co-operate.

How many colts have you seen on farms during the past few years? Indications point to high prices for horses during the next decade.

All sweet potato growers would greatly increase their yields if they would practice careful seed selection at digging time. This must be done before frost.

One farmer cut four seven-foot posts from black locust that had been planted only eighteen years. Locust will help solve the fence-post problem now that chestnut is gone.

Grasshoppers deposit their eggs during the fall in the hard soil along roadsides, fence rows, and other undisturbed places. The disking of those areas will destroy a large percentage of these eggs.

Chief Proved Worthiness

How did the story of Hercules and the three-headed monster, Cerberus, at the entrance of Hades stagger the youthful imagination! What strength, what daring right at the mouth of the eerie underworld! Yet from British East Africa comes a news dispatch with the story of a native chief who braved a blazing and spitting leopard barehanded. Hercules' story after all is but mythology, but Murigo was Trimu's in reality. Leopards had been raiding the kraals. Several of the chief's subjects had been killed. One morning the alarm was given and Trimu, seven feet tall and a giant in strength, ran from his hut and, seeing the leopard mauling two natives, tackled him with his bare hands and tore him to pieces. The natives of British East Africa apparently exercise due common sense when they elect their chiefs.—Pierre Van Paasen in Atlanta Constitution.

Hunting in Siberia

Hunting is still of considerable economic importance over large parts of Siberia, particularly in the tundra and the forest regions. In some localities it is the chief means of livelihood, while in others it supplements fishing and farming. Sparse population favors the survival of fur-bearing animals, but the supply is decreasing as the country becomes more thickly settled. In consequence of the increase in the number of hunters and the more intensive methods of hunting fur-bearing animals are killed faster than they multiply.

This destruction has led the Russian government to restrict the hunting of wild animals and birds. Animal sanctuaries have been established. It is difficult, however, to enforce hunting laws over such a vast territory inhabited by so primitive a people.

Slants on Life

By J. A. WALDRON

The Unexpected

"YOU here? Well! This surprise is joyous!" He beamed upon her.

"Joyous!"

"Perfectly rapturous!"

"What enthusiasm! When did you arrive?"

"An hour ago. But was I not always enthusiastic where you were concerned?"

"You were enthusiastic, I remember, when you suddenly disappeared from New York." She cast down her eyes, but she still wore a smile. "Where have you been?"

"Just got back from South America. But my enthusiasm has returned with me." He looked at her ardently.

"Do you imagine you are the only man in whom I have seen enthusiasm?"

"Naturally not. Men have eyes and other senses. You are more attractive than ever."

They had met at Redondo Beach, on the Pacific. She looked at him and still smiled, but with a certain air of reservation. "And yet you went away without a word to me, and for a year I have not heard from you, Mr. Henderson."

"Plain mister, eh?"

"Quite proper, isn't it? Things have happened since I saw you." She fingered a miniature pendant upon a chain at her throat. He peered at it. "A man's portrait. Whose?"

"My husband's. Let me introduce you to Mrs. Hickett. Delighted to meet you, Mr. Henderson, in my new character. I know you are pleased to see me again, for you have said it with lovely adjectives."

"Miriam!" Her name was shouted from the verge of the sea below them. Henderson looked for the source of the call and saw a bullet-headed, athletic male looking up at them. Miriam did not seem to hear.

"I think that person down there called you," suggested Henderson, who had lost a phase of his smile.

"Mr. Hickett."

"Why," and Henderson again peered at the miniature, "he doesn't look exactly like this."

"No man looks the same in a bathing costume."

"You certainly didn't marry this man for his physical harmony and grace."

"You think that a shrewd conclusion, I suppose. He is worth ten millions."

"Well, that sum, even with his name, is passable. It would be passable to most women."

"It didn't pass me. You remember, don't you, that you disappeared suddenly? And I don't believe you have one million."

"But I have some other advantages. I believe he is calling you again." Mr. Hickett was calling again.

Mrs. Hickett turned and waved a hand at Mr. Hickett. "Yes, I heard him this time."

"But why didn't you hear him before?"

"Just a notion. I sometimes pretend I'm hard of hearing and that my sight is poor. If I didn't pretend my sight was poor I should see a lot of things that hurt a woman's vanity, even if she is not madly in love with her husband. Now Mr. Hickett, as you can see with half an eye, is fond of other pretty women. There are two with him at the moment. I don't care to go into the water with him, for he is ungallant enough to pay more attention to others than he does to me. And at the dances he always ignores me as long as there is another slightly woman to be had. Perhaps these aberrations, as I may call them, are because he is married to me. Besides, if he sees me even talking to a good-looking fellow like you—especially to a bachelor, for bachelors, he says, have neither obligations nor consciences—he rages. But let's go down and I'll introduce you."

As Mrs. Hickett and Mr. Henderson walked slowly to the shore he spoke rapidly in low tones to her, but she simply laughed. Mr. Hickett apparently misconstrued her joyousness, for he frowned as they approached.

"I'll introduce you first," said Mrs. Hickett, "to a woman I'm sure you'll be delighted to meet. She tells me she has traveled far within a year looking for a husband."

And thus Henderson unexpectedly met Mrs. Henderson, from whom he had spent a year in flight.
